Dear Josh:

The BBC-TV office has asked if there is any information available about attempts to decontaminate rockets. Apparently, they would like to incorporate some references to this project in a TV program on space which they are preparing for release next autumn. I am sure they will be grateful, as I would, if you can suggest any publication in which this information has been incorporated.

During the last six months we have seen more of our Stanford colleagues here in London than we did while we were there on the campus - at least I have seen some here whom I have never seen before even on the campus! This is just to say that we should like to have the pleasure of seeing you and your good wife the next time you are in this part of the world. In the meantime, all the best from our house to yours!

Sincerely,

Bill
